I've never had this kind of error before A: The problem is that you have a number too big to be stored in Python's memory. To confirm this, print out the maximum integer you can store: >>> import sys >>> sys.maxint 9223372036854775807 On this platform, that's over  $2^{31} * 10^6$ , or  $10^{18}$ . You need to find some way of handling this case. Since Python's standard integer types cannot handle this, you need to use your own numeric class. SAN FRANCISCO (MarketWatch) -- Microsoft Corp. MSFT, +1.43% shares fell in after-hours trading Tuesday after the software maker reported second-quarter earnings that came in slightly below Wall Street expectations. But the company said sales rose to $8.67 billion from $8.48 billion, and operating income increased to $5.25 billion from $4.89 billion. The results beat analysts' expectations, and represented a 15% jump in revenue, and a 41% increase in operating income. "We have no plans to change our fiscal year end or the guidance for fiscal 2008," said Microsoft Chief Financial Officer Chris Liddell in an interview with Wall Street analysts after the company 2d92ce491b
