The market is a one of a kind shopping experience for both tourists and locals. You will find live cooking demonstrations at the food court. Most of the food is sold at fixed prices in order to discourage people from bargaining. This way of selling food might have been a practice in Ancient Egypt, but not in today's Egypt where bargaining is a normal practice. There are plenty of street vendors serving food and drinks in the area around the market.

Hammamet The spas of Hammamet are also very popular with both local and foreign tourists. There are plenty of Hammam options available. At first I wanted to go to the first one I saw. It is El-Ahram Hammam which is right next to the central bus station. When I asked the travel agent where I could go for a more relaxing experience, she suggested the Hammam Al-Raml ("warm") which was quite near the hotel I stayed at. So I went there. I had a massage and then a few hours later my masseuse was able to massage me again. It was relaxing and a good way to unwind. Hammamet market in the evening Another place where people like to visit is the Hammamet market, which is in the same area as El-Ahram Hammam. The market is a bit more bustling and interesting at night. A line of shops selling various souvenirs and knick-knacks line the roads leading to the market. There are also various shops selling shoes and clothes. There are also a number of restaurants here serving local specialties and pastries. While a lot of the time I prefer to go to the better-known places in Luxor, there are plenty of things to do in this area as well. The Roman era amphitheater, the great temple of Ramses II, the obelisks, the Roman and Egyptian temples, the Greek, Roman and Islamic baths, the Little Italy, the Italian hill town with its churches, the stables where the horses were housed in the time of the pharaohs, and of course the market.
