The Matrix: Path of Neo (2005) Overview: In The Matrix: Path of Neo, you play as Neo as he attempts to fight off the Brotherhood of Zion, a militia of computer-controlled sentinels - highly trained soldiers wielding deadly weapons - who have enslaved human beings in the matrix in order to create a new brainwashed race. Your objective is to escape the matrix and destroy the Brotherhood of Zion. Features: - Original Story Line: The events depicted in The Matrix Reloaded and The Matrix Revolutions are set in motion in this updated version of the groundbreaking video game. When the power-hungry humans created an invincible computer program known as The Oracle, it wiped out the majority of human life. The remaining, weak humans were enslaved in to The Matrix, a virtual reality created by the Zion Matrix. - A Gorgeous Gameplay: The action is fast-paced and visually stunning, with a smooth, intuitive interface. - Reinvented Physics: The Wachowskis' renowned use of CGI, which was first apparent in The Matrix trilogy, has never been more beautifully implemented. - Artistic Transformation: The special effects, redesigned soundtrack, and new character and location designs take the game far beyond your average video game and into the realm of cinema, giving the film experience a run for its money. - Distinctive, Cutting-Edge Gameplay: Demonstrated throughout the webcasts, the new gameplay system -- skill based fighting, the use of special weapons and weapons that react to the physical actions of the player -- is unlike anything you've seen before. Feel the exhilaration of running and gunning as Neo, like never before. I can't recall exactly when I first saw Charles and Ray Eames' wonderful and breathtakingly beautiful Architectural Digest Posters (1949-1957), but it must have been a long time ago, because when you put it all together it's like a coherent whole. They were, indeed, the bible of mid-century design, and their influence is still pervasive, virtually unperceivable, and if you look hard enough, delightful. You ba244e880a
